Masters of the Fall.

The next two golf majors for the men are The Masters. Let that sink in.

This year has come with a slew of challenges, but the PGA tour fought on. By being the first sport to resume after the March COVID-19 outbreak the PGA Tour has felt like a full season that led to the Tour Championship to be played before the two Majors in the fall. The US Open, played at Winged Foot, in late September and concluded with a Bryson DeChambeau win at 6 under par.

Typically The Masters is played in April with the first signs of spring, this year we will see with the beginnings of fall.

Imagine Augusta with reds, yellows, and oranges instead of the traditional pink azaleas. The reigning Master's champion is Tiger Woods with his 5th win at Augusta, one shy of Jack Nicklaus's record. It's safe to say Dustin Johnson, Justin Thomas, Tony Finau, or Bryson all have golf games to carry them to the finish and end up in a green jacket. So at age 44 can Tiger Woods be the second oldest winner again, or is it someone else's turn to shine this year?
